even though most people probably see alley cats as wild, law-breaking, debauchery, as with critical mass, people come to the race with their own styles and agenda.

there is a good chance i'll be racing on a tandem with my 12yr old step-son. i want him to be a safe rider :) /driver :(when he gets older so we'll likely be obeying most traffic laws.

good family fun!!! tell your friends.

scott f won in about 1:08. and i think i heard it was right in front of a sly f.

the two tandems finished in about 1:38. go tandems.

patrick b was dfl... not, of course, due to lacking ability or sense of direction, but a flat tire.

I came in 3rd a couple minutes after Scott and Sly with you right behind me. The next group rolled up 15 minutes or so later.

No prizes for 2nd or 3rd, in fact I don't think there were any prizes at all unless I missed something.

Right on! Welcome to the site. If you're the guy that organized the cat, that would mean you're Ryan, right?

I was the other Ryan taking pictures at the beginning of the race. I should have some shots up later today or tomorrow along with a few other recent events.

Are you gonna put em on bikesandbombs? I'm thinking of setting up the gallery per individual instead of per event. I think it would be cool to have a central place where everyone can post their pictures. What do you think? Would that be better or do you like it how it is?

I'm more inclined to put them on my flickr account and allow others who like them to do the rest. Link, steal, modify, etc. I'd prefer if I get credit for them instead of someone trying to pass it off as their own work, but I think the desktop size I put out more than takes care of that.

That's why I was kind of thinking a gallery for each individual would be better. Would you use the bikesandbombs gallery if you had your own account and everything?

I just want something easy. Not all my pictures are cycling related. It's much easier for me to just make them available on my Flickr account. It's time consuming enough for me to work through all the pictures, let alone getting them up. I spent most of last night on them after waiting for people to show at the collective.

Crap, I should have posted here that I wouldn't be able to make it. I told Cory, but I didn't think anyone else was planning on it. Did anyone else show up?

Patrick showed up and I handed him half my pile of flat tubes. I was so tired I was barely making sense to myself and everyone was looking at me funny. That or I just noticed it this time!
